ANDY GARCIA'S THE LOST CITY

Discussant: Jorge Casariego, M.D., Florida Psychoanalytic Society and Mercy Hospital

Like the distillation of countless family legends that are treasured by Cubans who were forced to flee their homeland, this film carefully and poetically re-creates that older, beloved Cuba. Starring Andy Garcia, who also directed, as a nightclub owner and Bill Murray as an expatriate American writer who provides running commentary on the action, the film showcases the music of that period, and its characters carry themselves with grace and confidence. Lost City was a labor of love for both Garcia and screenwriter Guillermo Cabrera Infante, both of whom came from that Cuba. The anti-Batista revolution's effects on Cuba's upper and middle classes are seen through the prism of one family: Patriarch Federico, a professor, hopes for democratic change, while two of his sons become ardent members of the revolution. The eldest son (Garcia) believes he and his nightclub can ride out the storm even as the political conflict shatters his family.
